1. A naval detachment of 30 sailors is stationed at the fishing settlement of Rumpka, three kilometers from Leba (F55/H32), where there was a V-1 launching site during the war. This detachment is quartered in a former German building. In July 1952, 40 sailors were housed in two newly-built one-story buildings, both about 40 meters long, situated in the nearby wood, about 2,000 meters from the shore. These buildings cannot be seen from the sea.
2. The entrance to this area is guarded by naval sentries, and sailors are brought here by truck for some type of construction work.
a concrete road with a continuation out into the sea is being built here. This road would be used for launching submarines brought overland in case of a blockade of the Polish Baltic ports.
the installations of the former German V-1 launching site are being rebuilt.
3. A 15-meter-high observation tower for checking the direction and speed of winds is situated in a direct line with the barracks described above, along the sea wall toward the west. At a distance of about 10 to 12 meters from the tower there is a small brick building, like a bunker, containing the installation of the meteorological station. It is manned by naval personnel.
